Mini Track on Leadership and Management Beyond Borders

Mini Track Chair: Dr. Tatiana Gladkikh, University of Aberdeen Business School, UK

This mini-track will address the issues of leadership and management faced by organisations in a wider global context as the World emerges from the global pandemic. The reality of the postmodern world characterised by its fluidity, instability, insecurity and permanent change will be discussed from the leadership and management perspectives identified by contributors and could include such considerations as: conceptualisation and theorisation of the contemporary context in which organisations strive to survive and succeed, global challenges facing organisations in the twenty first century, implications of social and political change on management and leadership in organisations, cultural divergence and convergence in the post-pandemic world, development of a global mindset as a step towards addressing universal issues, the future of organisations, including their management and leadership from the perspective of younger generations, the impacts of the Great Resignation on our conceptualisation of the workplace, employee empowerment and organisational responses and leadership challenges in international organisations and finding new solutions: theory and practice.

We are inviting interdisciplinary research contributions and topics related to:

- Organisational issues, challenges and opportunities in the post-pandemic context
- New trends in organisational culture of contemporary organisations
- Leadership developments in organisations of the XXI century as a consequence of societal change and uncertainty
- Universal issues and the global mindset
- Leadership responses to environmental challenges: lessons from around the world
